J.D. Class of 2019

Garrison Social Justice Scholar Award Information

Each year, the Law School selects at least one Garrison Social Justice Scholar from among current first-year J.D. students who apply for the scholarship. Each Garrison Social Justice Scholar shall:

- receive a supplemental annual scholarship of at least $7,500¹ for the second and third years of law school
- agree to pursue an academic curriculum in preparation for a social justice or public interest career
- receive a summer fellowship stipend of at least $5,000² during rising second-year and rising third-year summers
- choose a public interest summer experience for both summers prior to graduation, with at least one summer focused on social justice³

During the spring semester of 2017, the Law School will select one member of the Class of 2019 from among those who apply. The Class of 2019 Garrison Social Justice Scholar Award includes a supplemental annual scholarship of $18,400 and two summer fellowship stipends of $5,000, making the total award worth up to $46,800 over two years.

Notes:

¹The precise amount of the scholarship is determined each year. The Class of 2019 Garrison Social Justice Scholar award includes a $18,400 annual scholarship that supplements scholarships already received, the total amount not to exceed full-tuition. Students currently receiving full-tuition scholarships are not eligible for Garrison Social Justice awards.

²The precise amount is determined each year. The Class of 2019 Garrison Social Justice Scholar award includes a $5,000 stipend for each of the two summers prior to graduation.

³A "social justice summer experience" focuses on advancing and protecting the rights of individuals (or organizations aiding individuals), particularly those that may have been discriminated against or are otherwise unable or hindered in protecting their own rights to safety, equality and freedom, including but not limited to the poor (including the working poor and indigent criminal defendants), the elderly, the disabled, mentally ill and others deprived of their civil or human rights. A "public interest summer experience" could focus on serving the broader public interest in positions such as interns in judicial chambers, U.S. Attorney's Offices, government agencies, or non-governmental organizations.
